service & learning

Give your students the opportunity to help another child learn through Books of Hope!

The children we serve are refugees, orphans, former child soldiers and former child slaves. They all need to learn English, and they have no access to books.

Instead of having your students produce a report about science or social studies or fill out a math or grammar worksheet, why not have them turn their work into a simple nonfiction book that another child will cherish for a long time to come? Your students' books will help provide that child with the education he or she so desperately needs.

The schools we sponsor have requested books in every subject area: English, music, art, science, math, health sciences, physical education, and social studies. Books of Hope can fit into almost any classroom at any grade level.

Through Books of Hope, you're providing an invaluable service while still following your own curriculum. Over 60,000 students across all 50 states have participated!

"This has been a great project that has literally changed my students' lives. 7th graders often have a hard time looking outside of their own little world, and this has truly helped them expand their view and see things from a new perspective. I was truly touched when I showed my students the pictures and videos and so many of them asked, 'What more can we do?'"

Sincerely, Trent M.

"You are inspiring me as well as my classmates to go out and make a mark on the world. This has been a truly uplifting and amazing experience for me, and I hope to do something like this again."

Sincerely, Lauren H.

"We thank you for the good number of well designed books made by our fellow young children. The books will strengthen our ability and understanding. They will also help us in acquiring many vocabulary words, hence strengthening our English speaking. We kindly request for more copies just in case there is another chance."

Yours Faithfully, K. Gonzaga
